Guidelines set for study of McAndrew

By William Jason Yong
Staff Writer

Hanson Engineers, Inc., the Springfield firm hired by SIU-C to investigate the structural integrity of McAndrew Stadium, will base its investigation on a list of questions prepared by University engineering experts.

The questions were submitted by four faculty members of the College of Engineering and Technology and by the Physical Plant Engineering Services.

Bruce Swinburne disclosed last week that SIU-C is paying Hanson Engineers $23,000 to conduct the study of the east and west stands of the stadium. The questions were prepared by Philip K. Davis, Najim Rubayi, Aslam Kassimali, and Kenneth Tempelmeyer, all from the College of Engineering and Technology; and by Allen A. Haake, supervising architect-engineer at the Physical Plant.

The firm was asked to find out:

— if stadium stands were built according to original plans and specifications, and, if not, to list deviations and their possible impact on the structures;

— the maximum static load that can be applied to the east stands without resulting in buckling failure;

— the maximum allowable safe deflection of a horizontal span under static load;

— how many spectators can be allowed safely on the east stands during athletic events in which there are periods of excitement in spectator movement that dynamically loads the stands;

— if there is any evidence of structural fatigue or cracks, and if so, to identify locations, severity and possible effect on safety of the stands;

— the current state of corrosion and effect on structural integrity;

— if there is a need to place load limits on the use of the structure to provide a low probability of fatigue failure;

— if there is any reason to think the stands are unsafe and, if so, to recommend corrective measures;

— if there is any clear or present spectator danger if the stands are loaded to capacity.

The structural integrity of the stadium became an issue following police reports in 1979 claimed that there was visible movement of support beams beneath the east stands of the stadium.

On Nov. 3, 1979, during a football game against Indiana State, an investigation was conducted by Wiss, Janney, Elstner and Associates, Inc., a consulting and engineering firm from Northbrook. The firm, which was paid $4,093 for the study, reported that further studies were needed.

Hanson Engineers will also conduct a preliminary analysis of the stadium's conformance with building codes and static stress level, consider fatigue aspects of the steel structure.

Idea of merit pay for teachers viewed with approval, concern

By Robert Green
Staff Writer

Like many administrators in education, Dean Donald Beggs of the College of Education said he favors the concept of merit pay for public school teachers.

"I think it's important that we as a society reward truly outstanding work," Beggs said. "Most other lines of work have some sort of incentives, and teaching should too. I don't think merit pay would necessarily attract better people, but it would certainly help keep quality teachers in education rather than joining the private sector."

However, some public school teachers attending SIU-C this summer don't share his enthusiasm for the idea and expressed concern about how evaluations of teachers would be conducted.

"I believe that the evaluation system could be based too much on personality and not performance," said Debi Kaley, who teaches third grade in Robinson.

"A teacher with an unorthodox teaching style might get passed over in favor of another teacher who is easier to manage," she said. "Many teachers would feel they have to change their methods to conform to the criteria of evaluation tests."

Kaley, who is writing a thesis on the merit pay issue, said that a better way to improve public education would be to raise teacher salaries across the board to attract better people and dismiss bad teachers during a probationary period during their first year of teaching.

Under a proposal being considered in Tennessee, teachers would be evaluated by other teachers or by principals from outside the teacher's district.

Ron Van Horn, a seventh- and eighth-grade teacher from Sesser-Valer, said that regardless of how evaluations were conducted, favoritism would enter into the evaluation process.

Van Horn agreed with Kaley that raising all teachers' salaries would best attract better people, but he said low salaries aren't the only problem in public education.

"The state of public schools is a reflection of what is happening at home, and that's the greatest problem," he said. "Parochial schools simply get the better and more disciplined students. 'Lereas we get everything else.'"

Van Horn said the debate about merit pay "all boils down to a political issue which some

State lawmakers OK teacher union bill

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Teachers would have the legal right to unionize, bargain collectively for wages and work conditions and go out on strike under historic legislation approved Monday by the Illinois General Assembly.

The 34-21 Senate vote, which sent the teacher collective bargaining bill to Governor Thompson, marked the first time the Illinois General Assembly has OK'd a proposed bargaining law for public employees.

Sens. Ken Buzbee, D-Makanda, and Gene Johns, D-Marion, were among those voting in favor of the bill.

About 80 percent of Illinois public school and community college teachers are represented by unions, and teacher strikes are common across much of the state each fall. But the unionization, and strikes, have not been recognized by state law.

"This is indeed an historic day," said Robert Healy, president of the Illinois Federation of Teachers, a union representing 47,000 teachers in the state, including those in Chicago.

"We are absolutely thrilled," said Reg Weaver, president of the Illinois Education Association, which represents about as many teachers as the IFT, but mostly in downstate school districts.

"Ten years of struggle have culminated in this victory on collective bargaining," Weaver said. "The (IEA) feels that a bargaining law will bring peace to school districts throughout Illinois."

"The kids and the parents have absolutely no protections under this bill," said Sen. Roger Keats, R-Wilmette, an opponent of the proposal. "This throws management into a box."

Foes complained the measure fails to require binding arbitration before teachers could walk out on strike in a dispute. And they said provisions were vague and weak for school boards to seek court injunctions ordering striking teachers back to work.

"We are talking about public employees ... who are paid with tax dollars," said Sen. Adeline Geo-Karis, R-Zion. "I say it is wrong to encourage a bill that allows teachers to strike."

Other opponents, mostly Republicans, said the proposal robs local school boards of control over local education questions.

They also predicted the law would drive up local real estate taxes to pay for contracts and labor disputes, and would reduce the overall quality of public education.

But Sen. Terry Bruce, D-Oleay, the sponsor, said teachers should be given the same legal rights as other American workers covered by the National Labor Relations Act.

"I don't believe we are preempting any kind of local control," said Bruce. "All we're saying is that the boards and the teachers have to sit down and talk."

Faculty might bargain contracts

By Paula J. Finlay
Staff Writer

If signed by Gov. James Thompson, the newly passed teacher bargaining bill could mean that SIU-C's faculty will be bargaining for contracts in the 1984-85 school year, Faculty Senate President Herbert Donow said Monday.

"There's no question in my mind that a year or two from now we'll be bargaining for contracts," Donow said.

However, Donow said passage of a law doesn't make bargaining automatic. "It's up to the employees," he said.

Donow said he hadn't seen the final version of a bill, but that it would probably require approval by faculty before bargaining could begin.

"As the president of a union, it's obvious that I think it's a good thing," he said.

"If we do our work well, it will make a difference," he said. "It's what we've been waiting for."

Larry Bell, regional director of the Illinois Education Association-National Education Association, said, "We're very proud that it passed."

Bell said that although college campuses traditionally have not been very prone to organize, the new bill, combined with current economic problems, may cause them to organize now.

people are going to ride for votes. Education is one of those areas that is easy to criticize and everyone has an opinion on."

While merit pay is hardly a novel idea in educational circles, in the political arena it has only recently become an item of national debate.

President Reagan has in recent weeks repeatedly called for incentive pay to award superior teaching performance, and in so doing he has made merit pay a major issue.

He has been joined in support of merit pay by Secretary of Education Terrell Bell, who said it would "dramatically improve the teaching profession," and by Tennessee Governor Lamar Alexander, who has proposed the peer evaluation plan for his state.

Alexander proposes to evaluate teachers every five years and, based upon classroom performance, promote some to the position of either senior teacher or master teacher, with an additional pay raise of between $2,000 and $5,000.

The proposal, which was endorsed by Reagan, further calls for these teachers to take part in the evaluations of their peers.

The issue's recent media coverage has compelled several Democratic presidential hopefuls to take stands on the matter and it seems certain to be part of the 1984 political debate, especially since it follows a special commission's report in April on the decline of American public school education.

The National Education Association, the nation's largest teachers' union with 1.7 million members and a powerful lobby in the Democratic party, has opposed merit pay plans. NEA president Willard McGuire has said that merit pay plans are meant to "pay a few people more so that they can pay most people less."

The merit pay issue may become even more prominent in the next few months as a bipartisan task force on teacher merit pay begins meeting in Washington D.C.

Rep. Paul Simon, D-22nd District, will chair the task force, which will study ways to reward good teaching and make recommendations to Congress. The task force will hold hearings in July and will compile a report by Sept. 30.

James Sanders, president of the Illinois School Boards Association, will also be a member of the 20-member task force.

Sanders, an attorney from Marion, said that the teachers, lawmakers and representatives of teacher organizations on the task force will offer "quite a difference of opinion, but we'll try and reach some consensus."

"Whatever the result, I'm glad that people are finally becoming more aware of educational problems in the country," Sanders said.

and prepare a written report with recommendations.

In a report submitted to the University more than a year ago, William E. Brower, associate professor in engineering and mechanics, said that during a football game in 1981 he witnessed a 6-inch peak-to-peak bounce in the main support beam of the stadium's east stands.

Brower's report said that a 6-inch bounce puts more than twice the fatigue-endurance limit on the beam. He stated that the pressure caused by the union foot-stomping of a capacity crowd could cause the stands to collapse. He added that the chances of such a collapse could be as high as "one in 1,000."

Last spring, SIU-C President Albert Somit told an SIU Board of Trustees committee meeting that the University had commissioned three reports on the structural safety of the stadium and that all three reports concurred on the stadium's essential soundness.

Brower's report also said that arrays of bolts were missing from the support structure and structural maintenance of the stadium appeared to be nonexistent.

When the report was released in April, Clarence Dougherty, vice president for campus services, said the University had done all of the repairs it felt were necessary, such as replacing missing bolts. However, missing bolts from the stadium's structure are still apparent.

Dougherty said in April that the stadium would not be used this fall unless the University received assurances that it is safe.

The proposal submitted by Hanson Engineers to Haake said that if "non-destructive fatigue testing" is needed, it would cost between $6,000 and $12,000. But if "hole structure dynamic analyses are appropriate," that work could cost between $25,000 and $50,000.

Swinnburne said in a Intercollegiate Athletic Advisory Committee meeting last week that there is no clear division as to who is responsible for maintaining, improving and modernizing athletic and recreational facilities on campus. The $21,000 paid to Hanson Engineers will be split among the president's office, the office for campus services and the IAAC, he said.

Motel desk clerk held up for $214

Two men robbed the Carbondale Ramada Inn of $214 Thursday night according to police.

Desk clerk David Smith reported the theft at 11:35 p.m. He told police he was working at the front desk when a man approached him for change for a $5 bill.

While he was making the change, Smith said, the man leaped over the counter and drew a 9mm automatic handgun. The man, described as being about 6 feet 6 inches tall and weighing about 200 pounds, escaped with the money and a companion.

Senate debates abortion amendment

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Heeding advice that it was time to "restore some sanity" to the costs of running for governor, the Illinois Senate voted 36-23 Monday for public financing of the races and lids on political donations, ignoring opponents' claims that the program would rob the state treasury of money that could be better spent.

Other backers said 1982's election race between Governor Thompson and Democratic challenger Adlai Stevenson III, in which the two spent about $8 million, proved a need for a cap on campaign spending.

The program would work the same as the presidential campaign financing law. Illinois taxpayers could check a box on their state income tax return indicating if they wanted $1 set aside in a gubernatorial campaign fund.

Bill OK'd to cap campaign funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate launched an unprecedented floor debate Monday over whether to amend the Constitution so that Congress and the states could ban abortions. Sponsor Orrin G. Hatch conceded he didn't have the votes but insisted "This is not an exercise in futility."

President Reagan has called upon Congress "to make its voice heard against abortion on demand... whether by statute or constitutional amendment."

The amendment, which simply says "A right to abortion is not secured by this Constitution," would require ratification by 38 states if cleared by Congress. It would not outlaw abortion, nor would it restore old laws struck down by the 1973 decision of the court. But it would empower both the states and Congress to enact new bans or restrictions.

Court rules for states in tax battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court resolved a big-stakes tax war Monday by voting to allow states to collect hundreds of millions in extra taxes from multinational corporations doing business within their borders.

By a 5-3 vote, the court ruled in a California test case that a state may base its taxation on a corporation's worldwide income.

Tax experts said the decision will save the 23 states now imposing some type of a "unitary" system of taxes at least $625 million a year in revenue, and may spur other states seeking greater tax revenues to try it.

Two American balloonists die in crash

SCHWEINFURT, West Germany (AP) — Two Americans — including Maxie Anderson, one of three men who piloted the first hot air balloon across the Atlantic — died Monday when their balloon crashed in a Bavarian forest during a race, police said.

Anderson, 49, of Albuquerque, N.M., and Don Ida, 48, both died at the scene of the crash outside Schweinfurt, police spokesman Siegfried Brendel said.

The cause of the crash was unknown. But Brendel said police suspect the balloonists may have been attempting an emergency landing to avoid crossing the border into East Germany.

Students plan Washington protest trip

By Charles Victor
Staff Writer

Several SIU-C students are again planning to show their displeasure over American involvement in an international hot spot.

The issue: U.S. involvement in Central America. The organization: the Coalition for Change, formed two years ago on campus to deal with social justice issues. The plan: a demonstration in Washington, D.C., on Saturday.

U.S. involvement in El Salvador sparked the formation of the Coalition for Change in spring 1982. The group has held talks, teach-ins and demonstrations, including a protest march through downtown Carbondale and a memorial service in honor of Archbishop Romero, who was murdered by Salvadoran government troops while saying Mass.

"But the situation is deteriorating," said John Patrick, leader of the coalition. "Barely 15 years ago Americans my age were dying in a useless war in Vietnam because in the beginning no one said anything about it. Central America is not Vietnam, but we may be making the same mistakes there."

This weekend, the coalition will take a group of protesters to Washington as part of the Midwest Latin America Solidarity group, which will tie in with other groups for a large demonstration on Independence Day weekend. The demonstration itself will begin at the Vietnam War Memorial in Washington on Saturday.

Referring to U.S. presence in Honduras, where the military and the CIA are training guerrillas to overthrow the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua, Patrick said, "The Reagan administration is breaking both international laws of respecting the sovereignty of nations and congressional rules forbidding the use of the CIA to overthrow foreign governments."

"I have met people from Nicaragua and some of our own faculty who have worked in El Salvador," he said. "They all say American action there is reaping a harvest of hate for the United States. They are not all communists, but many are forced to turn to the communists as their only source of support because our government refuses to support them in their legitimate fight against oppressive dictatorships. Instead, our government actively supports these dictatorships that destroy democracy."

Patrick noted that more than 60 U.S. military advisers are in El Salvador and many more in Honduras, and that the Reagan administration has not ruled out the use of U.S. combat troops in the region. "It frightens me when I hear people like Senator Barry Goldwater call for the use of our combat troops and a military solution to the problem," he said.

According to Patrick, the average SIU-C student is still indifferent to the problem.

"They all say they do not have time or money to get involved," he said. "I guess they will have to wait till we or members of our family start getting killed before they act. I don't want to wait that long."

Heidi Fillmore, a founding member of the coalition, said that 17 people have signed up for the trip. "We still have a few places open," she said. The trip will cost $55 plus food per person, and lodging is free, she said.

Patrick said the group will leave Carbondale Thursday evening and return Sunday afternoon.

Summit may result in 1-year tax plan

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Gov. Thompson and legislative leaders, facing a fast-approaching deadline, were poised today to endorse a one-year income tax increase and ask rank-and-file lawmakers to ratify it.

"It's the only plan that's on the table. It either works or it doesn't," Thompson said after lawmakers met for about 90 minutes in his Statehouse office.

The new proposal from the House GOP would increase by about $156 million over their previous plan the amount of money available for state spending.

But it does not offer increased revenue sharing for local governments — a possible sticking point for Chicago Democrats pushing for more state aid.

It would raise personal and corporate tax rates by 20 percent, retroactive to January, until June 30, 1984.

It also would boost sales taxes by a penny, permanently, starting next January, and would remove the remaining 2-cent sales tax on food and medicine.

Overall, it would generate about $663 million over the fiscal year starting Friday. The permanent sales tax increase would bring in an estimated $315 million a year.

Thompson warned Sunday in Chicago that if the tax talks fail to produce a compromise, the state will have to endure the resulting cuts in state services at least until next year.

In the absence of an agreement on taxes, Thompson said, the state must begin dismantling programs that would have to be wiped out under the no-tax-increase — or "doomsday" — budget Thompson has proposed.

"We have to start taking those steps so that we'll be ready ... if the Legislature leaves Springfield without adequately funding state government. And there is that very real risk."

Thompson also has warned that 2,000 state employees will lose their jobs starting Friday without higher taxes.

Partiers hold the key to Halloween future

CARBONDALE has finally made a move to recognize the inevitability of the annual Halloween celebration. In making that move, the city is sticking its neck out for Halloween revelers in the face of continuing fears that the party could get out of hand.

Particularly susceptible to unnecessary criticism in that regard is Police Chief Ed Hogan. He helped produce the "City Fair Days" proposal to allow drinking and possibly on-street sale of beer over an expanded area during Halloween weekend.

Those who would like to see the end of the annual celebration would say Hogan and the city were accepting and even condoning a potentially dangerous situation. But the Halloween party, for its size, has been an increasingly peaceful affair in recent years — and shows no sign of decline.

DURING PAST celebrations, police have looked the other way about open drinking and arrested only destructive and violent partiers. The alternative would have been to order the arrest of all the revelers for illegal drinking — certainly not a reasonable plan, considering the sheer size of the party.

This year, Hogan is supporting a proposal that carefully spells out the rights and responsibilities of both the partiers and the city — a game plan for Halloween which should make the celebration more enjoyable for participants and more manageable for police and clean-up crews.

In essence, the city has tried to ignore the celebration, and it has not worked. Given the choice of trying to force its demise or going along with it, Carbondale has decided to go along. That decision places new responsibilities on the Halloween participants.

DRINKING BEER and celebrating on the streets during Halloween weekend is now OK, but restricted to an eight-hour period both Friday and Saturday nights. Glass containers and hard liquor will still be taboo.

Revelers should honor those restrictions. Eight hours of celebration two nights in a row should satisfy even the die-hard reveler. Going beyond the established hours would be an unnecessary risk — both to an individual, who could be subject to arrest, and to the future of the city's involvement in Halloween itself.

There is no justification for such a risk. If the city is going to stick its neck out for Halloween revelers, then the revelers should respond in kind.

Close stadium; save $23,000

Why bother spending $23,000 on a study to determine if McAndrew Stadium is structurally sound?

It's logical solution is to close the stadium down and cancel the football season. By doing this we would not only save $23,000 but the university would no longer have to support the football players who are here on a free ride. The added bonus would be that we would no longer be subjected to the losing Saluks.

With the $23,000 the university could raise the quality of education here at SIUC. In my opinion that is needed much more than the stadium. — Vanessa Vandenberg, Sophomore, Journalism.

It's a newspaper's headache

Headline errors are a hazard

HEADLINE mistakes can create headaches for newspapers, sources and readers.

Just ask DE staff writer Karen Torry, the author of a recent story which carried an inaccurate headline.

"Inaccurate headlines can cause a newspaper to lose credibility and a source to lose trust in the reporter who did the story," Torry said.

At the DE, headline writing is the responsibility of editors and copy editors. In the newsroom division of labor, reporters write their stories and depend on other news processors to write headlines.

In reading and editing a story, headline writers hope to create a headline which presents the news accurately and attractively so that a product — the news story — is sold.

SOMETIMES, though, headlines are confusing, misleading or inaccurate.

"Mistakes in headlines are magnified," DE faculty managing editor Bill Harmon said.

Headline writing has not always been a hazardous job. Headlines as we know them today sprang up during the Spanish-American War in 1898, often replacing generic labels (e.g., State News, Maritime News) that were in common use. In fact, headlines are an American invention whose limited use dates to the Civil War.

Apparently, readers like these bold splashes of printer's ink which help "grade" the news by telling them which stories are the most important to read. The headline crowns the lead, which every fledgling journalist knows is the story summarized into the first paragraph. Today, the headline has shrunk to six or eight words which condense the story even further than the lead.

HOW HARD is headline writing?

Harmon: "It's one of the more difficult skills news-ed students bump into. It's hard to boil down complex stories into six words and do it in a clear, accurate and interesting way with active verbs."

Using active verbs is sine qua non for headline writers who

Press Watch

Don Sneed
DE Ombudsman

also learn to avoid using minor words such as the articles. Punctuation in headlines can be different than in writing, but the biggest challenge, Harmon said, is "condensing the story into telegraphic language of six or seven words."

"Headline writing requires more than just the ability to condense a story into a few words. It also requires the ability to see and to understand the story," Harmon said. "Students often haven't developed a news sense, haven't developed the import of the story."

KATHY Kamienski, a DE copy editor who is a non-traditional student with newspaper experience, grapples with headlines daily.

Kamienski: "Headlines are extremely important. They are usually a person's first impression of a story. If a headline is unclear, a reader won't bother to puzzle over it, and if it's inaccurate, the reader will feel cheated or shortchanged."

Which headlines are the hardest to write?

Kamienski: "It's hard to write a fair and balanced headline when the story is controversial."

What thought processes do you go through when you write a headline?

Kamienski: "First, the size is designated. You know you have so many letters to use to make the headline fit. Then you read the story. Next, you start thinking in headline language. It's not good to grab a line out of the story and repeat it, however. I keep certain thoughts in mind. Am I being fair? Is the headline libelous? Is it true to the essence of the story? Is it grammatically correct? Does it fit?"

JOURNALISTS usually don't aspire to be copy editors or headline writers, but Harmon reminds students in editing class that good copy editors are in demand and that for every reporter's job that is available four or five copy editing jobs are open.

Still, youngsters don't grow up wanting to be copy editors. Why?

Harmon: "Head writing is difficult to master. It's fraught with error. Sources and reporters complain about headlines being wrong or misleading. The rewards are mostly personal satisfaction in a job well done."

Kamienski (concurring): "I get a mental tickle in saying something just right and in drawing attention to a story. Feature stories give me more opportunity to be imaginative without getting cute, but there seems to be an overabundance of punsters among headline writers."

PUNSTERS aside, headline writers often tend to think in terms of "headlines": fire (blaze), stop (bar), legislators (solons), investigation (probe), etc.

What causes headline writing errors?

Harmon: "Inattentiveness on the part of the copy editor or editor, or the story may not have been written as clearly as it should have been."

What does the DE do to reduce headline errors?

Harmon: "I mark a lot of headlines and display them. Both good and not-so-good headlines. And I suggest ways in which the heads should have been done."

Any parting thoughts?

Harmon: "Headline writing requires some thinking, some brainpower. It may not be a highly celebrated skill, but I tell students that if they plan to stay in journalism, it will pay them to learn the skill because desk jobs pay more than reporting jobs."

NASA should make its own milestones

LET'S FACE IT, space cadets — sooner or later, they're going to run out of milestones to publicize on space shuttle flights.

This time, it was the first American woman in space. And the first retrieval of a satellite from free orbit. And the first physician in space. And it was almost the first landing of a spacecraft at its point of origin.

Next time, it'll be the first black in space. Then the first night launch and landing. Then a record-heavy landing weight.

But how long can the networks and wire services keep the public interested in space shuttle milestones? I'm getting bored already. And when it comes down to TV coverage of the first mission with live gila monsters that eat Cheerios and sleep in boxer shorts aboard, I'll stop watching.

PERHAPS THE National Aeronautics and Space Administration should consider inventing a few milestones to keep public interest (and subsequently, federal investment in space) at a peak. Otherwise, the space shuttle will go the way of the airplane — and who would watch if the networks covered every 747 flight?

But, on the other hand, who could switch channels when the first space shuttle manned with kamikaze pilots glided toward the landing strip? NASA wouldn't be losing a spacecraft, it'd be gaining three points in the Neilsens. The only problem would be a loss of royalties — the poor pilots wouldn't be around to put their faces on shaving cream cans or panty hose packets.

AND WHO COULD help but tune in to the first on-location taping of a soap opera aboard a shuttle? "As The World Turns" would certainly take on new meaning. Watching the actors and actresses try to keep covered up during love scenes in zero gravity would appeal to even the most casual daytime viewer.

The space agency could also cash in on an established ratings winner by opening up the shuttle's cargo bay doors and staging the first weightless Super Bowl on the flight deck. If a receiver misses a pass, he can always wait 90 minutes for the ball to orbit the globe and try again. Dick Enberg and Merlin Olsen could double as flight engineers and game correspondents.

People get excited enough when of Joe down the street hits a phone pole — so imagine the millions of beady eyes glued to the set when the first fender bender in space takes place.

How about the first Libyan dictator in space? Oops ... darn, forgot to show him how to land.

And, of course, there's the ultimate high-interest milestone: the first "60 Minutes" interrogation in space. NASA could put Mike Wallace aboard a shuttle across from an ejection seat containing a known mob figure, and let the cameras roll.

WALLACE: "Listen, Rocky. Tell us about your involvement with high-level Reagan administration personnel, or we'll eject you without a spacesuit and watch your blood boil. Now, I don't want to pressure or intimidate you ..."

With ideas like these, NASA could put an end to the mundane milestone. If the agency wants to keep the space shuttle in the limelight, it has to think in TV terms — schlock and dreck are what keep the viewers coming back for more.

So who wants the first cargo-bay launch of a satellite with curb feelers when we can have the first reunion of Lite beer commercial stars in space?

The Wright brothers probably asked the same question.

Physical Plant faces possible budget cuts

By Dan Devine
Staff Writer

Like most SIU-C administrators, Physical Plant Director Thomas Engram is keeping a close eye on the legislative budgeting sessions in Springfield.

At stake is the continued running of a $7 million dollar operation that Engram said is already going an extra mile in order to cut costs.

Primary concerns are the utility costs—electricity, coal, water, natural gas—which are the heart of the Physical Plant operation.

State funds have not always matched rising costs of energy in the past few years, Engram said.

"This causes quite a strain on the University," he said. "There are certain things that have to be done. You have to pay your utility bill and you have to pay your people. If you don't pay your utilities you're out of business."

Utility costs make up most of the Physical Plant budget but Engram and his staff are also responsible for maintaining the academic buildings and other facilities on campus such as the Student Center, the Recreation Center and University housing.

They also take care of repairs, carpentry, plumbing, electrical work, painting, elevators and lighting. Engram said that more than 300 employees clean, sweep, mow lawns, vacuum, remove trash and shovel snow.

The Physical Plant also has an engineering service that plans and assists in construction of new buildings.

However, the building program has come to a halt because of the decline in the state's economy, Engram said. The last major campus project was the renovation of the Davies Gymnasium which was completed last fall. Other priorities may soon suffer as well, Engram said.

"Routine maintenance is going to be a real problem if the University doesn't get some funds," said the 62-year-old West Frankfort native.

The Physical Plant operated in fiscal year 1982 on a budget of almost $7 million. The budget for fiscal year 1983 is expected to be about 10 to 12 percent higher, Engram said, primarily because of inflationary fuel costs.

Physical Plant Director Thomas Engram says the plant will "try to do its very best" in dealing with a tight budget.

Electric costs take a major chunk of the annual budgets—about $3.6 million last year. Coal costs (the plant burns between 47,000 and 52,000 tons of coal per year) are about $1.6 million.

One response to the budget squeeze is to cut costs. Engram said a conservation program has been in effect since 1974, and that the Physical Plant is squeezing almost all it can out of that effort. He said slightly more than $700,000 was saved in utility costs this year (based on a comparison with the pre-conservation base year of 1973), primarily with the help of a computer that diagnoses areas of waste.

University heating and cooling systems are set at 68 degrees in winter and 78 degrees in summer; and other standard conservation methods such as using insulation, caulking and lowering water temperatures are used.

"We have to continually figure out new ways to conserve," Engram said.

"We're continually into these new programs."

Roofing is one of the Plant's major maintenance priorities because water seeping into building creates expensive clean-up jobs.

"As the campus gets older these problems get more complex," Engram said. "Most of the buildings appeared in the 1960s and early '70s.

Engram has been at the Physical Plant longer than that, joining the department in 1965 as an electrical engineer. He was named director June 9 after having served as acting director since August of last year.

As serious as the present problems appear, Engram said they can be beat.

"The budget crisis is a tough problem," said the one-time Air Force lieutenant colonel. "The physical plant is used to dealing with tough situations. We'll try to do our very best. We'll survive."

County public defender believes 'justice' is following procedure

By Jeanna Hunter
Staff Writer

Justice. It's one of those vague, indescribable concepts that is so much a part of the American tradition.

And for Patricia Morris, it's something she deals with every day.

"I think it changes from day to day," she said. "It's not whether you're guilty or not guilty, but that all proper proceedings are followed in reaching the end."

As the new Jackson County Public Defender, Morris is now in a position to see that proper channels are pursued. She is the first woman to hold that position.

She is the former first assistant to the public defender, inheriting her new post from Dennis Waks, who resigned last month. Morris, 31, graduated from the SIU-C School of Law in 1977. While in school, she was a research assistant with the Prison Legal Aid Project and with Prison Legal Services.

She was an assistant defender with the Fifth District Office of the State Appellate Defender from 1977 to 1980.

The desire to have the power to help people motivated Morris' decision to pursue a law degree. Although she considered being a social worker and a librarian, Morris said she felt that as a lawyer she could do more for people.

But, she said, the job doesn't have as much power as she thought it would. In fact, Morris said, there's a huge feeling of powerlessness.

Sometimes, she said, everybody seems to be working against the client. She said that while the state's Attorney and the police are trying to convict people, she is the only one speaking out in their defense.

Regardless of the built-in conflict between the State's Attorney's Office and the Public Defender's Office, Morris said that the members of these offices have a good working relationship.

"Most can go into court and do battle and leave what's in court in court," she said.

That kind of attitude goes for Morris personally even though the hours are long, sometimes from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Paperwork is already mounting for Patricia Morris, new Jackson County Public Defender, in her Murphysboro office.

"I try not to take my work home with me," she said. "It's so stressful. I try to leave work when I leave here but sometimes it's impossible to do, especially the big cases. They are always with you."

"It's real high pressure because people's liberty is at stake. We take it for granted, but your work lets a person go free or sit in jail."

When she loses, she said she feels "pretty crummy." But there is some consolation in knowing that she's done all that she could.

Besides, she said, things move so fast in the office that there's little time to dwell on a loss.

Morris said that knowing whether a person is guilty or innocent doesn't affect her handling of the case.

Her purpose, she said, is not to determine guilt but to make sure the state proves guilt fairly and properly within the law.

"It's absurd to think that I'll never represent a guilty person," she said. "The majority are guilty."

Even in cases that are personally appalling, personal feelings must be set aside, she said.

"It's a clinical attitude, personal opinions are not involved," she said.

Murders and rapes are not the most common cases, she said. Most cases deal with traffic violations or theft and burglary.

Some of the most intense cases that the Public Defender's Office has dealt with have occurred in the last year. Morris said in that time they've handled four murder cases, while they usually deal with only one or two a year.

These intense cases are not Morris' only challenges. She is responsible for administering an office which consists of three assistant public defenders and about 450 active cases.

Doorenbos takes Wisconsin job

New scene calls science dean

By Rod Stone
Associate Editor

Norman J. Doorenbos, who left his position as dean of SIU-C's College of Science Friday to become vice president of academic affairs at the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire, should have no problem adjusting to his new surroundings.

Adjusting to new surroundings and new experiences has become routine to Doorenbos who, as an active researcher in the field of drugs and toxins, has traveled to many exotic places all over the globe.

When Doorenbos came to SIU-C in 1977, the University gained access to two research field stations in the Caribbean, which he set up while at the University of Mississippi. One, a $1 million facility called the Bitter End field station, has had University researchers working there almost continuously since Doorenbos arrived, he said Friday.

"We've had professors, undergraduate and graduate students who have gone down to the Caribbean and done research on problems in the ocean," he said.

Hanging on the wall opposite his desk in Doorenbos' office is a 90-pound stuffed fish, a memento of an experience at the Caribbean research station — it almost killed one of his graduate students.

"He was 30 feet underwater spearing some small fish for one of our research studies and that fish grabbed his right leg and just hung on," Doorenbos said. "But he killed that fish. He shot it with a spear and bent the spear, which was very heavy, all out of shape."

Doorenbos said he could "write a book" on his experiences at the station, which has become a major research center on fish toxins.

He has also helped faculty do research in such places as Greece, Egypt, Haiti and the Virgin Islands.

"There are many things that I've done here, but perhaps the most important is having created an atmosphere where it is fun to be in the College of Science," he said.

In tough financial times for higher education, he said, this atmosphere has kept faculty from leaving for fatter salaries in industry.

Before coming to SIU-C, Doorenbos was in charge of growing all of the marijuana used for research in the United States. In 1968, because of his reputation in the field of drugs and toxins, the National Institute of Health asked him to participate in a study of the effects of marijuana.

Doorenbos said he has benefited in many ways from his faith.

"One of the reasons problems don't bother me, and you have a more than 300 different kinds of marijuana to the government. He has spoken at more than 300 universities about the negative effects of marijuana, he said.

"Marijuana does most of the harmful things that tobacco does, most of the harmful things that alcohol does and some harmful things that neither alcohol nor tobacco do," Doorenbos said.

Marijuana has damaged the physical and mental health of hundreds of thousands of individuals, he said.

"It's tragic that that is what's happened," Doorenbos said gravely. "I had hoped when I began the research that marijuana would turn out to be safe."

Doorenbos has also done research on traditional healers — who Americans would call "witch doctors" — in the jungles of Africa, Asia and Latin America.

He has spent considerable time in Nigeria, where plants are used for healing, to learn from the traditional doctors about what they do and to identify those plants that might contain a drug useful in modern medicine, he said.

If you work with a traditional healer, you must accept him and his lifestyle, he said. This involves living in a mud hut, sleeping on a dirt floor and eating what the "witch doctors" eat, he said.

"And they have to sense that you have some respect for them," Doorenbos said, "and I do. I'm amazed at some of the things they can do. What they do is valuable. They're the only medical cure available from most people in Africa."

Doorenbos said that in the United States in the 1920s, a compound fracture — where the bone breaks through the skin — was frequently fatal.

"But in many parts of Africa in the 1920s, if you had an appropriately qualified traditional healer, he could save your life," he said. "We say they're primitive people and they don't know very much, but I tell you, you put you or me there, we'd have a hard time surviving."

Doorenbos has also been elected an honorary vice president of the Nigerian Association of Herbal Doctors.

One of the things that helps to keep Doorenbos going is his strong belief in Christ. He said that the complexity of the living organism convinces him of the existence of Christ.

"We have today several million scientists in the world, a high proportion of whom are doing research that's directly related to life itself," he said, "and we're just scratching the surface."

Doorenbos said he has benefited in many ways from his faith.

"One of the reasons problems don't bother me, and you have a lot of them in administration, is because of my own personal faith," he says. "They don't get to me because I know the solutions will be found."

Doorenbos was born in Flint, Mich., and received his bachelor's degree in chemistry in 1950 and his master's and doctoral degrees in pharmaceutical chemistry in 1951 and 1953 respectively, all from the University of Michigan.

Pookas come to life in 'Harvey'

By Terry Levecke
Staff Writer

"Harvey," the light-hearted comedy about Elwood P. Dowd and his favorite companion, Harvey, a 6-foot, 1-inch invisible rabbit, kicked off Summer Playhouse '83 with brilliant performances by Charles Parker and Beth Perry.

Play Review

The actors successfully established their characters with distinct idiosyncracies and mannerisms. Parker, a three-year Playhouse veteran who returned from Harding University in Searcy, Ark., where he has taught and directed for five years, turned in a fine performance as Elwood P. Dowd. His interpretation of Dowd was comparable to James Stewart's in the movie version of the story, conveying a good-natured, passive man who has a very simple but heart-warming outlook on life.

This easy going character, whose favorite line when someone asked if there was anything they could do for him was "what did you have in mind?", could be content in almost any situation. His passive adaptation to any situation is how he became involved with Harvey the Pooka.

As revealed in the play, Pookas are fairies in the shape of huge animals that are visible only to certain people and only when they want to be. After Dowd met Harvey on the street, they enjoyed many evenings in the local bars talking about people and life.

Parker had trouble dealing with the presence of Harvey at the beginning of the play on opening night. It was difficult to envision just how Harvey was moving about. But as the play ensued, his communication with Harvey became much more defined.

Beth Perry, a doctoral student in her first season with Summer Playhouse, charmed the audience with her portrayal of Elwood's sister, Veta Louise. Veta is a robust and extremely emotional person. Her excessive blubbering and hysteria over her brother's illness got her committed to the sanitarium instead of Elwood.

One of the funniest scenes in the play is when Veta returns home after being mistakenly committed. The humor of the scene is brought about by her physical appearance and her extreme exhaustion after a bout with the sanitarium's macho attendant, Duane Wilson, and a treatment in the hospital's hydro-tub. She thought she had been accosted by a "white slaver."

Candida Sinopoli's performance of Myrtle Mae Simmons, Veta's daughter, was a little less convincing. She seemed to be playing to the audience too much instead of becoming engulfed in her character. Myrtle Mae showed no sympathy for Elwood or his over-sized companion. They were ruining her life.

Needless to say, Harvey put on a sterling performance too. Wilson heard him say something in the hospital office as he was reading about Pookas, and Veta admitted to seeing him around the house, but his biggest impression was made on Dr. Chumley, played by Eric Ewan. Ewan is a Southern Illinois native and a graduate student in Speech Communication.

The play leaves the audience admiring Elwood and believing in Harvey. It puts into perspective what a strange outlook most "normal" people have on life. People like Elwood who enjoy life as it comes, who do no harm to other, who aren't grasping and ambitious, are thought to be a little bit nuts.

Technically, the play went very smoothly opening night. Scene changes were quick and usually quiet. Only one technical error was apparent. This happened when a door was supposed to be shut and it was left open. When the next characters entered, a knocking sound was produced from back stage.

The play was very well received. The script was filled with double entendres and intended confusion, which the actors usually pulled off very well, but sometimes accentuated too much.

The 40's era costumes, selected and assembled by Daniell Lindheimer, were very well done. She successfully matched the characters to their dress and the period.

Russell awesome at Shryock

By T.E. Sparks
Entertainment Editor

Leon Russell rocked Shryock Auditorium Friday night with a show that mixed originals with Russellized covers of other artists' hits.

Simply described, Russell was exciting. His presence and way with songs was awesome. The man demonstrated why he has become an icon in the eyes of both musicians and the general public — why he has such a following.

Concert Review

Seldom rising from behind his keyboards, Russell nevertheless was a commanding presence on the stage. His ability to make anything he sings his very own was aptly demonstrated as he tore through a stack of songs.

Obviously, Russell plays what he wants to. The live Leon Russell appears to have very little to do with the recorded Russell. Unlike most performers, Russell didn't play songs mostly taken from his latest album. In fact, he never even mentioned any albums.

Instead he treated the 1,000 people in the audience to selections that placed no emphasis on his recording career. There was no emphasis on his own material either. Russell romped through material from such diverse artists as the Rolling Stones, Bill Monroe and Ray Charles.

Backed by seven musicians and two female background vocalists, Russell kicked off the show with a rousing version of "Woman Way 'Cross Town." Throughout the remainder of the show, the musicians complimented the frenzied style Russell is most known for, something not all that easy to do. Even more amazing, they kept pace.

Following the rousing cover tunes in the opening, Russell treated the audience to several of his own compositions. Russell ripped through an obligatory version of his best-known single, "Tightrope," that was further enhanced by the presence of a violin-player chiming in.

The band and Russell exhibited some wicked playing that brought the crowd to its feet as they breezed through a surprisingly up-tempo "Back to the Island" and a gospel-sounding version of his classic "Stranger in a Strange Land."

The highlights of the evening though, were when Russell exhibited his song-styling abilities on the works of another singer-keyboardist, Ray

Charles. In "I'm a Leaving" the soulful blues of Russell's voice were further enhanced by lead guitar licks made famous, more than likely, before the guitarist was even born.

Later in the show, Russell alone on stage, crooned an even more soulful "Georgia On My Mind," accompanying himself with piano riffs that would make Charles proud.

The soulful, balladeer side of Russell was further shown by solo renditions of his own "A Song for You" and "Lady Blue."

The majority of the evening, however, had the distinct feeling of a deep-south, clap-your-hands, gospel revival. The songs, almost all up-tempo classics such as "Rollin' in My Sweet Baby's Arms" were liberally laced with Russell's honky-tonk piano and searing solos on a blues harp or fiddle.

The music was a curious mix of Cajun, calypso, and rhythm and blues that often had the audience standing up and clapping to the beat.

The one spot of the night was the sound. The volume was deafening and more than likely would have been adequate to fill the Arena. For a mixed crowd of old and young, it was simply too much.

Fiddler charms Sunset crowd

By T.E. Sparks
Entertainment Editor

The 2,000-plus crowd at Turley Park Thursday night was treated to some down-home fun thanks to the fiddle playing of "Hee Haw's" Tommy Williams, backed by Southern Illinois' own Priebe Bros. Band.

At 8:15 p.m., the Priebe Bros. kicked in with Waylon Jennings' "Good Hearted Woman." From that point on the action seldom slowed.

Concert Review

The band, made up of young, local talent was more-than-ready and obviously buoyed for the show, coming fresh on the heels of their win at the Tri-State Wrangler Country Music Count-down. That win means the band will be on its way to compete at the Illinois State Fair, and should they win their, a trip to The Grand Ole Opry in Nashville.

Several songs into the show, these youngsters were joined on stage by silver-haired, energetic Tommy Williams.

"Just one minute while I get my fiddle," said Williams, "and then we'll be ready to go."

And go they did, breaking immediately into the crowd-pleasing signature song of a fiddler, "Orange Blossom Special." Right away, it was obvious that William's style differs quite a bit from that of most of the better-known country and western or country-rock fiddlers.

Williams style is smooth and colorful. Unlike many fiddlers who appear to think that speed is everything, Williams seems to realize his ability to stretch out a line and entertain the crowd without having to madly saw away with his bow.

Adding Williams' smooth fiddling to the already-tight sound of the Priebe Bros. made for a pleasing mix. Rounding out the show was the occasional lead-singing by Williams' wife, Donna, whose pleasant country voice added just one more fine point to an already good show.

Throughout the evening, this conglomeration of talent played a string of country and western cover tunes that ranged from country swing to tunes with a rock sound. The songs ranged from classics to current hits by contemporary artists.

Included in the night's offering was an original Priebe Bros. tune written by Lynn Daniel and L. Kinnie called "You Make Me Feel the Feeling." This number, the first single by the band, is a beautiful ballad that features the smooth harmonies of the lead singers that were so often demonstrated that night.

Both prior too and immediately following the show, Williams was in hot demand. It seemed that almost everyone wanted to talk to him, shake his hand or get an autograph — sometimes all three. Williams never failed to make time to accommodate them.

Overall, what started as just another Sunset Concert, turned into a community event. The crowd was a mixed bag of both students and community members, neither of which went away disappointed.

Enrollment down in Underway; Some classes may be cancelled

by Paula J. Finlay
Staff Writer

Programs for everyone from canoeists to runners will be offered as part of Touch of Nature's Underway programs this summer, but if enrollment doesn't improve some of the sessions may have to be cancelled.

Response to the summer Underway programs has been disappointing, Mark Cosgrove, coordinator of Underway programs, said. A minimum of eight participants is required for each event to take place, and some of the programs have not had anyone sign up yet. Cosgrove said some of the sessions might be cancelled soon.

The Underway programs offer wilderness excursions and workshops at the Touch of Nature Environmental Center, Barb Oakes, public relations person for Touch of Nature said.

Programs in canoeing, backpacking, running, and wilderness skills training will be offered this summer, she said.

Three canoe trips are the summer's first programs. The cost of each trip includes equipment, food, transportation by van, instruction, and insurance, Oakes said. Participants need to bring their own clothing and health items, she said.

A week-long canoe trip to Ontario, Canada July 9 to 17 is open to persons 16 and older. Cost of the trip is $348 per person.

A canoe trip on Missouri's Current River for people 14 to 15 years old will take place July 25 to 28. The cost of the trip is $108 per person.

From July 30 to Aug. 6, a canoe trip to Wisconsin's Flambeau River will be offered. The trip will cost $252 per person.

Underway will offer a backpacking trip in the Colorado Rockies Aug. 1 to 14, Oakes said. The two week trip is open to persons 16 years of age and older and will cost $485 per person. The cost includes instruction, transportation, equipment, food and insurance, she said.

A Runner's Workshop for high school and college students will be held at Touch of Nature Aug. 6 to 13, Oakes said. Runners will be involved in sessions on stretching exercises, yoga, nutrition, exercise physiology and stress reduction. The week-long workshop will conclude with competition in a local road race to be named later. The workshop cost of $240 per person includes instruction, insurance, food and overnight lodging at Touch of Nature.

An advanced skill training workshop for persons conducting wilderness programs will run Aug. 5 to 9 at Touch of Nature, Oakes said. The workshop is open to persons 18 and older and will focus on safety policies, trip planning, budgeting, and philosophy of conducting wilderness programs, Oakes said.

The cost of the workshop is $151 per person and includes instruction, insurance, food and overnight lodging at Touch of Nature, Oakes said.

Oakes said persons interested in enrolling in any of the Underway programs should contact Mark Cosgrove at Touch of Nature four to six weeks before the workshop date.

Apology plan draws mixed reaction

WASHINGTON — Some Americans are up in arms over the thought of a national apology to the people of Japanese ancestry who were put in detention camps after the attack on Pearl Harbor 41 years ago.

"The most absurd idea you guys in Washington ever came up with, and you've had some great ones," a World War II veteran from Tampa, Fla., wrote the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, which has proposed an apology and redress in the form of a $20,000 payment to each of the approximately 60,000 internees who remain alive.

All told, 120,000 were put in the camps, some for 2½ years or more. The commission called the episode "a grave injustice."

In reaction, the panel says it got 60 to 70 letters, most of them negative. Some of the letters are blatantly racist, but most offered the argument that under the circumstances the internment was warranted.

"The relocation action in 1942 was a sound and logical reaction to an enemy attack and does not require an apology," wrote a Californian who had been a prisoner of Nazi Germany in World War II. "Where is the commission to reward those who fought for their government?"

Some of the correspondents make the point that injustice is an inevitable by-product of war.

"It was an unfair and an un-American thing to do, but it should be considered one of the many evils of war," one wrote.

A couple from Texas told of being imprisoned by the Japanese in Manila: "There then followed 37 months of brutality, deprivation and degradation that is so well documented that it need not be repeated here. At the end of that time we were brought back to the States and let off the train at Newton, Kan., with one suit of clothes and a suitcase each and no job to make our way back into civilian life in a wartime economy as best we could."

"Since the United States government has not seen fit to give, or offer, compensation for our imprisonment and brutal treatment, nor force the Japanese government to do so, it does not seem reasonable to recommend compensation for the Japanese-Americans or their descendants for far less arduous but better publicized treatment."

Many of the writers made no distinction between the people of Japan and people of Japanese ancestry living in this country. Two-thirds of the internees were U.S. citizens; the others were legal residents.

"Their war caused their own inconvenience," one correspondent said. Another, a former American prisoner of war in Germany, said that when the war ended everyone in Germany claimed to have been anti-Nazi all along.

"I feel the same way about the Japanese-Americans," he wrote. "If the tide of battle had gone the other way, there would have been an entirely different story."

Soviet rocket to attempt linkup with orbiting space station

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soyuz spacecraft commanded by a cosmonaut who once held the record for the longest space flight vaulted into orbit Monday to make the second attempt in two months to link up with the Salyut 7 space station.

"The rocket's going steadily," mission commander Vladimir Lyakhov was quoted as saying as Soyuz 9 and its two-man crew went into orbit at 1:21 p.m. Moscow time (5:12 a.m. EDT), nine minutes after it roared off the launch pad at the Baikonur space center, in central Asia.

Lyakhov and flight engineer Alexander Alexandrov, making his first voyage in space, were to dock with Salyut 7 and the Cosmos 1443 supply craft linked with the orbiting space station in April.

Radio Moscow said the flight was "on schedule," and the two cosmonauts were expected "to get into" the Salyut Tuesday, 24 hours after the launch.

It will be the trouble-plagued Soyuz-Salyut project's second docking attempt since April 21, when the Soyuz 8 mission was aborted after it failed to link up with the space station.

Soviet media said the spaceship veered onto the wrong path. Western monitoring stations reported the two vehicles missed the linkup by yards. The three-man crew returned to Earth 24 hours later.

It was the fourth known failure since the Soyuz-Salyut program was started in 1967. Since then, four cosmonauts have died during space missions, one in a crash landing in 1967 and three when their Soyuz decompressed on returning to earth in 1971.

The Soviet media did not say how long, if the linkup was successful, that Lyakhov and Alexandrov would remain aboard the space station. But presumably their stay will be lengthy.

Unlike the U.S. space program, now centering on the reusable shuttle, recent Soviet space shots have focused on the ability of humans to withstand weightlessness for long periods.

The goal is believed to be establishment of space stations manned continuously, with the crews replaced periodically.

In contrast with the abortive April mission, which was piloted by air force Lt. Col. Vladimir G. Titov on his first space flight, Soyuz 9 was commanded by a veteran.

Lyakhov, 41, made his first space voyage in 1979, when he and Valery Ryumin spent 175 days in space, setting an endurance record. It was broken last year by Anatoly Berezhovoy and Valentin Lebedev, who spent 211 days aboard Salyut 7.

Hospice to open in October

Helinda Edmondson
Staff Writer

Terminally ill patients in Jackson County hospitals will soon be able to stay in their own homes for the remainder of their illness.

The Jackson County Hospice care program, organized in February 1982, is slated to begin accepting patients Oct. 1.

"A hospice program usually takes about two years to organize," said Joanne Bean, the patient Care Coordinator at St. Joseph's Hospital in Murphysboro, "ours will take a little less."

The hospice care program, a relatively new concept in this country, is based on the need of people with terminal illnesses to be surrounded by the supportive care of their family and community. Hospice staff members aid and supplement the families in all areas, from providing skilled medical attention to transporting children to and from school.

Bean said that while the hospice is a strictly volunteer program, funds will be needed to ensure its survival. She stressed that there are no fees involved for the patient, only a need for commitment on the part of the family.

The remaining task to be completed before the program begins is the training of volunteers. Bean said there will be three training sessions, the first of which will be held the last weekend in July. The second training session will be held the last week in August and the third session is tentatively scheduled for some time in September.

Volunteers must complete all training sessions to be qualified to work in the program, Bean said. She said that while there has been no problem in recruiting volunteers from the Carbondale and Murphysboro area, there is a need for volunteers from the smaller communities, such as Grand Tower.

"I don't think it's because of a lack of enthusiasm," said Bean, "I just don't think the word gets out about the program from the larger towns."

Persons interested in participating in the hospice program may contact Bean at St. Joseph's Hospital in Murphysboro.

Millions of motorists expected to travel over July 4 weekend

CHICAGO (AP) — Between 420 and 520 people could die in traffic accidents across the nation during the three-day, Fourth of July weekend, the National Safety Council estimated Monday.

The holiday period begins at 6 p.m. local time Friday and ends at midnight Monday.

With stabilized gasoline prices, millions of motorists are expected to take to the roads for summer's biggest holiday celebration.

Over the 1982 July Fourth weekend, there were 451 traffic deaths, down from a high of 556 in 1981.

The all-time death toll for the three-day observation was 638 in 1971, before the oil embargo and the federal 55 mph speed limit.

The council said that on a non-holiday period this time of the year, 420 traffic fatalities could be expected.

If all drivers and passengers wore seatbelts, and children were fastened in safety seats, 14,000 to 18,000 lives could be saved yearly, the council said.

Effective Friday, Illinois will join 39 states that have laws requiring safety restraints for children in cars. Under the new law, parents or guardians face fines if they don't strap their children under age 6 in approved car safety seats or seat belts.

Children through age 3 must be strapped into car seats, and children 4 and 5 must be in a car seat or restrained by a seat belt in the family car.

A maximum first-offense fine of $25 can be levied, and a second violation could bring a penalty up to $50.

Most car safety seats can be bought new for $30 to $60, officials said.

From 1975 through 1981 in Illinois, 140 children under the age of 5 were killed in traffic accidents, and 25,828 were significantly injured, according to the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago, which for two years has lobbied for the recently enacted state bill.

Eventual winner Dean Roper leads around turn one at the DuQuoin stock car race.

Favorite outduels small field to win DuQuoin stock car race

By Joe Paschen
Staff Writer

He was the favorite. He was expected to win. After two consecutive United States Auto Club (USAC) championships, Dean Roper was a cinch to return to victory lane.

Saturday afternoon at the DuQuoin State Fairgrounds he proved it.

Roper won his second DuQuoin 100-mile stock car race in three years by outlasting Joe Wallace, Ramo Stott and Butch Garner.

For his effort the Fair Grove, Mo., native won $3,575 to go with a winning paycheck from the opening USAC stock event June 5 in Springfield. The current USAC stock car standings have Roper again leading the field with 500 points. Rick O'Brien of East Peoria, who won the DuQuoin race last year, is second in the standings with 330. O'Brien finished fifth.

In front of O'Brien were four drivers who all led at one time or another. Garner, who posted the quickest qualifying time (38.068 seconds over the one-mile lap), led the first four laps in his Buick Regal. Wallace broke inside to lead on the fifth lap before relinquishing the front of the pack to the eventual winner.

Roper moved his Grand Prix into the lead over a small field of 10 cars on lap 61. Stott ran his Olds Cutlass inside and past Roper on lap 62 but could hold the lead for only six laps. Roper went back in front for the final 31 laps and finished several car length's ahead of Wallace and Stott.

Taking the checkered flag in a time 1:05:38.153, Roper averaged 91.413 miles per hour in front of 2,000 fans on a hot and humid afternoon. After the race he said he had expected it to be close.

"Even though we had a short field, and I hate that and the crowd does, but we had enough competitive cars," he said. "If they didn't get their money's worth on the race a couple times today, I don't know what they'd like. Those cars were really going at it."

Only one yellow caution flag was brought out. Garner's car spun into the rail on lap 61, and Roper briefly lost his lead. It was then that the two-time defending USAC point champion had to decide whether to stop for gas and fresh tires.

He stopped, but only for gas. With the quick pit stop, Roper rejoined the field before Chief Starter Duane Sweeney pulled out the green flag. Once the race restarted Roper grabbed the lead for good. He was especially happy with the performance of his Grand Prix.

"We just got the car set up so we could get a good bite coming off the corners and try to save on the tires and not spin 'em too much and hopefully try to run good the last 20 or 30 laps," Which he did.

Handed a cold drink after climbing from his car, Roper had a minute to reflect on how it feels being the driver everyone else is trying to catch. He remembered how it was when he was chasing the top driver.

"A lot of these guys out here, like Ramo Stott. He was a champion for years. I was with Ramo like 20 years. I always tried to outrun him, but we all tried to get to the same speed he was at. I remember when Butch Hartmann was champion everyone wanted to go as fast as him. Oh yeah, we all tried to run the fastest. I remember when I'd try to go fast three or four laps down."

Roper did not have to do much catching up Saturday. Stott fell into third behind a hard-charging Joe Wallace toward the end to make the race exciting, but Roper was never seriously challenged.

Wallace pocketed $2,265 for his second place finish. Stott won $1,820 for third and said afterwards he was disappointed by his car's performance on the turns.

"It seemed like they (Roper and Wallace) had a little bit more going into number one corner than I did. The only problem they'd give me was going into number one. They were on my back, or riding my back and finally they just got around me. It's as simple as that."

be a good scorer as a professional.

The players most likely to be gone in the first half of the first round are Stimpson, Stipanovich, McCray, Carr, Green, Russell Cross of Purdue, Dale Ellis of Tennessee, Thurl Bailey of North Carolina State, Darrell Walker of Arkansas, Byron Scott of Arizona State, Clyde Drexler of Houston and Leo Rautins of Syracuse.

The only guards among the most highly regarded players are Walker and Scott, one of six undergraduates who left college before their eligibility expired. The others are Cross, Drexler, Derek Harper of Illinois, Glenn Rivers of Marquette and Ennis Whatley of Alabama.

Rockets, Pacers set for NBA draft

NEW YORK (AP) — Ralph Sampson, Virginia's franchise-making center, and Steve Stipanovich, a less highly regarded big man from Missouri, are projected as the top choices by Houston and Indiana in Tuesday's National Basketball Association draft.

Houston, which won the right to pick Sampson No. 1 in a coin flip with the Pacers on May 19, also has the third selection because of a deal it made with Philadelphia last year when the 76ers acquired Moses Malone. The Rockets, after a weekend of analysis, announced Monday that they would take 6-7 forward Rodney McCray of Louisville with the No. 3 pick after Sampson and the 6-11

Stipanovich. General Manager Ray Patterson said the Rockets decided on McCray because he's "an outstanding floor man on both ends who will fit it well with Sampson and veteran frontliners Caldwell Jones and James Bailey."

Last week, Patterson said, the Rockets had narrowed their choice down to McCray, Sidney Green of Nevada-Las Vegas and Antoine Carr of Wichita State. Both Carr and Green averaged more than 22 points per game last season, while McCray's scoring norm was just 11.0.

Patterson said the Rockets, whose leading scorer, Allen Leavell, averaged only 14 points per game, believe McCray can

Cardinals in struggle to keep up with Expos

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals are trying, says Manager Whitey Herzog. Very trying.

Last year they were baseball's champions. This year they have suddenly fallen on hard times. They took a six-game losing streak into Monday night's game against the resurgent Pittsburgh Pirates. "You don't get mad, because they're trying," said Herzog. "You get awful disgusted watching it. If you don't get pitching ... well, I don't know. What can you do?"

They can try and stay within grasp of the lead in the National League East. "If we can just stay close until the All-Star break, we should be all right," Herzog said after watching St. Louis drop 3½ games behind the first-place Montreal Expos. The All-Star break comes a week from now.

Pitching — or, more precisely, the lack of it — has been the Cardinals' primary problem. The staff's collective earned-run average is 3.88, ninth in the league and Cardinal pitchers have given up 53 home runs in 69 games compared to the 94 they allowed in all of 1982.

"I can't believe some of the balls flying out of here," Herzog said after the Pirates belted six home runs out of spacious Busch Stadium in a 24-hour span. "They might set a record. I'd say the ball is juiced up — but it's not juiced up for us. If they keep going, they'll have more at our home than we have."

After the pitching, so solid last year, began to disintegrate early this month, outfielder Lonnie Smith went on the 21-day disabled list for drug-abuse rehabilitation.

Soon afterward, first baseman Keith Hernandez was traded to New York as Herzog sought to bolster his pitching by acquiring Neil Allen from the Mets. In his first start for the Cards, Allen beat his old teammates, four-hitting them in eight innings. Then, on Sunday, the Pirates pounded him 5-0 from now.

Joaquin Andujar, 15-10 last season, took a 3-10 record into Monday night's game against Pittsburgh. But Pirates Manager Chuck Tanner said he was not yet ready to write off either Andujar or the Cards.

"All I know is they're the defending world champions. Until they're defeated, they're No. 1 — not just in the National League but in all of baseball."

Veteran McCluskey still popular on race track

By Joe Paschen
Staff Writer

After a major sporting event, it's quite normal for fans to ask star athletes for autographs.

After last Saturday's USAC sanctioned 100-mile stock car race at the DuQuoin State Fairgrounds it was no different. In the crowded pit area one father led a little boy towards a man with driver Ramo Stott.

"Howdy Roger," said the boy's father. "I'd like you to meet my son, Timmy, this here's Roger McCluskey. One of the greatest drivers around."

Stott couldn't stop himself from roaring with laughter.

"Good thing he's no longer behind the wheel out here or I'd have finished even lower!"

McCluskey doesn't drive competitively anymore, but when he did the 52-year old Indiana native left his mark in victory lanes on various levels of driving all over the nation. He went into auto racing the same way he went out. Winning.

McCluskey won his first professional car race in Tucson, Ariz., back in 1949. His last race was the Tony P. P. P. 200-mile race for Indy-type cars in Milwaukee, Wis. He won there too.

In between McCluskey became a household name among auto racing fans and drivers, having won national championships at three different levels — sprints, stocks cars, and Indy Types.

McCluskey competed in 17 Indianapolis 500 races. He finished as high as third in 1972, fifth in 1975 and ninth in 1971. In 1972 he won the California 500 Indy-type race at the Ontario Raceway.

According to USAC Director of Communications Jeb Cadou, McCluskey was always very popular with the fans. According to McCluskey, now vice president and director of all USAC competition, he's just happy to still be involved in racing.

"It's really different from being a competitor, because you're on the other side of the fence," said McCluskey. "I remember when Steve Chasey told me one day, 'you used to be one of us, now you're one of them.' But I do enjoy the work I'm doing now."

McCluskey is the ultimate authority on all 6 USAC levels of sanctioned competition. He still does some traveling, usually to major races, but not as much as he did while he was an active driver.

"I enjoyed some success, but when it got down to quitting it wasn't important anymore," he said. "Being with my kids was more important. I didn't put racing number one."

"I talked to my wife and said, 'you know this is the best way. At least I don't have to go completely away from it and I think I can do it that way. At least I hope so.'"

McCluskey stopped talking and wiped the dust from his glasses and pulled a pen from his shirt pocket. He had another autograph seeker to please. As the father of this boy walked away with the requested signature, he could be heard saying, "Yeah, that's Roger McCluskey son. One of racing's finest."

"Is he still dad?" asked the boy.

"Yes son, he still is."

Roger McCluskey
